Entertained for Mrs. Brazeau. In honor of Mrs. Wm. Brazeau, the Historical and Literary club gave a most delightful porch party at the home of Mrs. M. H. Jackson. There were about twenty present, and the large porch presented a most inviting appearance.

The floor was covered with long draperies screened the guests from sun and wind, and palms and ferns together with cut flowers comprised the decorations.

When the white-gowned guests arrived, one could almost imagine it was a scene from a southern home. The entertainment consisted of a unique guessing contest, in which Mrs. Jackson won the prize, and the making of brightly colored tissue hats which the ladies were the remainder of the afternoon.

About five o'clock refreshments were served after which, in the name of the club, Mrs. Brazeau was presented with a souvenir spoon with the library engraved on the bowl. The president said, in her presentation remarks, was in token of the faithful work and many trips she had taken in preparing club lessons.

The Mrs. Brazeau leaves her active work with the Historical and Literary club, she still retains a social membership which does not seem to enrich her relations with Grand Rapids club and social life.

Will Teach Farming.

Milwaukee Free Press—I am going to Arpin to take charge of A. W. Rich's colony of Russian Jews," said Alexander Meublatt, Doylestown, Pa., at the Plankinton yesterday. "I shall leave for the colony tomorrow morning, and I shall take a tract of land and make it a model for the others to pattern after. What experience have I had? I am a graduate of Dr. Joseph Krauskopf's National Farming school at Doylestown, and I was for nearly two years connected with the agricultural department in Washington. My special duty was to visit the experimental stations throughout the country, and when not so engaged I was engaged in plant breeding. We have a lettuce in Washington which measures twenty-two inches across the head, and as soon as we have grown enough of the plants and allowed them to go to seed, the department will send the seed out over the country."

Mr. Monblatt, who is regarded as an expert, is to teach the colonists the scientific side of the life of a farmer. It is the intention of Mr. Rich, who is at the head of the colonization movement, to introduce cattle and poultry raising under modern sanitary conditions. No more settlers will be accepted in the colony until those already there prove themselves self-supporting. There are about fourteen families there at the present time.

Talking Drainage Matters.

At the meeting of the city council last Tuesday night the matter of draining the low land west of the city was discussed at length. A drainage plan had been prepared by City Engineer Philtre at the request of the council, in which he outlined and gave the figures on several plans for accomplishing the object in view. After discussing the matter at some length it was decided to leave the matter over for a time, as a number of the land owners west and north of the city have expressed a desire to form a drainage district, which if done, will probably solve the problem effectively.

If a drainage district is formed, all of the water in this section will be carried off, and the ditches will be deep enough so that the land will be made good for farming or residence purposes, and it is considered that this will be the most feasible plan. There is a large tract of land out in that section that is now practically worthless, and no ditch that the city could put in would drain it as thoroughly as could be done by a drainage district.

Fractured His Skull.

Will Sweeney met with a serious accident on Thursday evening, and it was thought at first that he was fatally injured, but the indications at the present time are that he may come out of it all right. He was coming down Second street at a good speed on his bicycle that evening, and when near the Christian Science church, the fork on his bicycle broke, threw him to the ground with great force, his head coming in contact with the stone curbing. He was taken to Riverview hospital, where an examination showed that he had suffered a fracture of the skull, there being a place about the size of a silver dollar that had been caved in by the force of his fall. The pressure from the brain was relieved and the wound properly dressed and since then he has been gradually getting better, and if no complications occur he will probably recover. If the boy recovers he may consider that he has had about as narrow an escape as generally occurs.

On Saturday a recent arrival from Germany appeared at the bank of Grand Rapids with a hundred dollar bill which he wished to have examined in order to discover if it were genuine. It only took a glance from Cashier Jackson to discover that it was a confederate bill and worth nothing at all except as a curiosity. The man explained that the bill had been given him by a money changer in Hamburg who claimed he was giving him United States Money for his German coin.

Have you tried it? If not, call on Haiverson & Mobery for a free sample of Postmaster tobacco. Put up in one pound pails.

LETTER FROM BUTTE

Mr. Decker Tells of Peculiarities of the Great Western Country.

Butte, Montana, May 29, 1906.

Editor Tribune, Dear Sir: It is impossible to measure or comprehend this country in a single week. There are but few industries here, but the few are run on such a broad scale that it keeps a tendency to guessing what he will strike next. My wife and I were taking a drive with friends through the mountains close to the headwaters of the Missouri river, where we found a cattle ranch extending for seven miles along the stream. One field containing 2,500 acres, where three thousand fat stock cattle were feeding. The grass was short, very short, and the country extremely rough and rocky, but evidently adapted to the stock industry. We saw two different kinds of four-horned head each being lead at Red Rock for the Seattle market. They were fattened on wild hay and were in the condition.

It has snowed nearly every day for a week. On the 10th we were caught in one of the worst snow storms I have experienced this season. With down in the valley the sun shone warm and bright. A fair lined summer hat would be quite appropriate here.

The old time freighter has crossed the great divide. At Red Rock we found a modern freighting outfit, three cars and an engine that hauls 15 tons of freight on a common mountain road at four miles an hour.

At this point the stage coach from Thunder Mountain arrives every evening drawn by from four to six horses and remains one of early days. The people we are visiting have five hundred head of well-bred cattle, mostly cows, yet they buy their cattle at thirty cents a pound and send twenty-five miles after cream for their coffee. All fruit and vegetables are shipped in from Utah. Oats produce a mammoth crop of excellent quality but the irrigating ditch must be close at hand. Almost everything is different from that of Wisconsin, yet it is in the people that we find the greatest center of interest. They come from every state in the union and from every country on the face of the earth bringing with them the peculiarities and notions of their section of country. Bringing with them an aggressive industry, unashamed ambitions and eager desire to better their condition and withal pluck and energy that laugh at impossibilities and that will not recognize failure.

We visited the Washoo Smelter near Anaconda yesterday, where they handle five thousand tons of ore a day. Their average monthly product of copper is 12,500,000 pounds, worth 15 cents per pound. Last winter this mine produced 3,000,000 ounces of silver and 10,000 ounces of gold. This smelt cost over 6,000,000 dollars and covers 300 acres. They employ 2500 men.

The wonder of the pilgrim visiting Butte is where the thousands of women and children as well as men find a place for out door recreation and amusement. The first thing that attracts the notice of the stranger is the absence of trees and foliage in this mountain mining camp. A few lawns and shrubs may be found after a diligent search, grass is almost unknown in Butte, but a street car trip of twenty minutes will take one to a delightful canyon under the shadow of the top-most peak of the Rocky Mountains.

The city is unique in that by the side of the modern business block or handsome dwelling stands the little old log cabin with its single door and window and dirt roof.

One may see on the corner a splendid business block or modern home and on another corner of the same block, a grim unsightly house standing over a shaft out of which the ore is being delivered and borne away on immense wagons or by cars on the electric line to the smelters located on the outskirts of the city.

The Butte Electric Railroad Co. has twenty-five miles of track in operation. For a five cent fare continuous ride of five miles can be had embracing the entire limit of Butte and giving a glimpse of all the leading mines and smelters.

Water for the supply of the city is taken from the Big Hole river, a tributary of the Missouri river, which has its source in the mountain range which divides the state of Montana and Idaho. The water of this river which should naturally flow into the Atlantic Ocean, is pumped over the main continental divide to a height of 840 feet, supplying the inhabitants of Butte on the Pacific slope of the Rocky Mountains.

We are having an excellent trip and enjoying every bit of it. We leave here Monday for Spokane, Portland and San Francisco.

Yours very truly,

A. Decker.

Lecture on Socialism.

There will be a lecture at Natwick's hall this evening by W. H. Gaylord on "The Mission of Socialism." The lecture is free, and everybody, including the ladies, are invited to be present.

W. R. Prospects for a Glorious Fourth

Mayor Wheelan reports that the prospects for a glorious Fourth of July were never better than they are this year. There has been a sum of over eight hundred dollars subscribed, with several premiums to bear from, and this will enable these having the matter in charge to get some good attractions for that day. A balloonist has already been engaged and other attractions are being rounded up as rapidly as possible.

One of the features of this celebration, which it is expected will be greatly in advance of anything that has gone before, will be the parade in the morning, which will consist of both floral decorations and band-trained floats. Several of the ladies of the city have undertaken to make a success of the floral part of the parade and there is no doubt but what they will be successful.

Rural Water Supply.

When people are induced to be interested by city government that the inhabitants of towns may have a regular water supply it seems strange that the people in rural areas would desire this no other than that the water corporation may serve a people in the country as it does the people in the city. The people are not yet, and the water companies are not yet, a thought of it, and in fact, in the United States of America there are no such companies.

He does not believe that he is suffering from appendicitis.

The matter of the election of a successor to President Pray of the Stevens Point normal school was not considered. Business Houses Burned.—Milwaukee.—For the existence of conditions in the packing houses of Chicago as set forth in the Neill-Reynolds' report. He began by inviting the committee to come to Chicago and spend a week in personal investigation of conditions. Some of the suggestions made in the report, he said, had already been complied with by the packers, such as additional sanitary facilities.

The Man on the Box

She had her cheeks with the poppies and for a brief second the flowers three a most beautiful color over her face and neck.

"What was your object in climbing on the box of my carriage and running away with it?"

Quick as a flash of light he concluded in answer, "Madam, it was a joke between me and some friends." He had almost said serving-maids, but the thought of Nancy checked his blurt.

"Injuries you and some friends?"—faintly contumacious. "Explain, for I believe an explanation is due me."

The snow was forced to rove again over Madam, it is truly embarrassing. Two maids were to enter a carriage and I am to drive them away from the carriage and once I had them in the carriage I thought it would be an admirable chance to play them a trick."

"Pray, since when have serving-maids been allowed out from the main hall of the British embassy?"

Mr. Robert was positive that the shadow of a sarcasm might rest for a moment on her lips, but it was instantly hidden under the napkin.

"That is something of which I have no legitimate knowledge. A groom is not supposed to turn his head on the box unless spoken to. You will readily understand that, Madam, I made a mistake in the number. Miss was 71, and I answered number 17. I was confused."

"I dare say, Seventy-one," she chimed, "It will be easy to rectify this, to find out whose carriage that was."

Mr. Robert recognized his mistake, but he saw no way to rectify it. She stood silently gazing over his shoulder into the night beyond.

"Perhaps you can explain to me that remarkable episode at the carriage door? I should be pleased to hear your explanation."

It had come, the very thing he had dreaded had come. He had hoped that the world ignore it. "Madam, I can assure you have sent for me out of curiosity only. If I offered any direct speech to you last night, I pray you to forgive me. For, on my word of honor, it was innocently done." He bowed and placed his hand on the knob of the door.

"I have a little patience, I prefer my right to forget that disagreeable incident." The truth is, "For my word of honor," coming from a groom, seemed strange in her ears; and she wanted to learn more about this fellow. "Mr. Osborne, what were you before you became a groom?"

"I have not always been a groom, it is true, Madam. My past I prefer to leave in obscurity. There is nothing in that past, however, of which I need be ashamed; and unconsciously it has become more erect."

"Is your name Osborne?"

"No, Madam, it is not. For my family's sake, I have tried to forget my own name." (I'll wager the rascal never left a quoin in the region of his conscience.)

It was the truth which was not truth that won his battle.

"You were doubtless discharged last night?"

"I did not return to ascertain, madam. I am only sent for my belongings."

"You have recommendations?"—presently.

"I have no recommendations whatever, Madam. If you employ me, it must be done on your own responsibility and trust in human nature, can only say, Madam, that I am honest, that I am willing, that I possess a thorough knowledge of horse-flesh."

"It is very unusual," she said, searching him to the very heart with her deep blue eyes. "For all I know you may be the greatest rascal, or you may be the honestest man, in the world." His smile was so frank and engaging that she was forced to smile herself. But she thought of something and frowned. "If you have told me the truth, so much the better; for I can easily verify all you have told me. I will give you a week's trial. After all,"—indifferently—"what desire is a capable servant. You will have to put up with a good deal. There are days when I am not at all amiable, and on these days I do not like to find a speck of dust on the metals, or a blanket that has not been thoroughly brushed. As for the animals, they never always shine like satin. This last is unconditional. Besides all this our force of servants is small. Do you know anything about serving?"

"Very little." What was coming now?

"The chat will catch you. I entertain some, and there will be times when you will be called upon to wait on the table. Come with me and I will show you the horses. We have only five, but my father takes great pride in them. They are all thoroughbreds." "Like their mistress," was Warburton's mental supplement.

"Father hasn't ridden for years, however. The groom I discharged this morning was capable enough on the box, but he was worse than useless to me in my morning rides. I ride from nine till eleven, even Sundays some times. Roman here till I return."

As she disappeared Warburton drew in an exceedingly long breath and released it slowly. Heaven, what an ordeal! He drew the back of his hand across his forehead and found moist. Not a word about the fine; he must brush it and thank her. Ah, to ride with her every morning, to adjust her stirrups, to obey every command to which she might give voice, to feel her small body respond his palm as she mounted. Heaven could hold nothing greater than this. And how easily a woman may be imposed upon! Deceitfully, Mr. Robert was violently in love.

When she returned there was a sun-bonnet on her head, and she had put off the poppies on her breast. (Why? I can't tell you, unless when all is said and done, he is the king on earth.) A man is always a man; and if perhaps he is blessed with good looks a little more than a man. You will understand that in this instance I am trying to view things through a woman's eyes. With a nod she bade him precede her and they went out toward the stables. She noted the flat back of the square shoulders, the easy grace of the swing of the legs.

"Have you been a soldier?" she asked suddenly.

He wheeled. His astonishment could not be disguised quickly enough to escape her vigilant eyes. Once more he had recourse to the truth.

"Yes, Madam. It was as a trooper that I learned horsemanship."

"What regiment?"

"I prefer not to say,"—quietly.

"I do not like mysteries,"—briefly.

"Madam, you have only to dismiss me to permit me to thank you for paying my fine and to reimburse you at the earliest opportunity."

She closed her lips tightly. No one but herself knew what had been on the verge of passing across them.

"Let us proceed to the stables," was all she said. "If you prove yourself a capable horseman, that is all I demand."

The stable-boy slid back the door and the two entered. Warburton glanced quickly about; all was neatness. There was light and ventilation, and the box-stalls were roomy. The girl stopped. Before a handsome bay mare which whinnied when it saw her. She held her check against the mare. "I'll take him now, William," said James smiling.

James shortened the bridle-rein to the required length, took a firm grip on Pirate's mane, and vaulted into the saddle. Pirate stood perfectly still. He shook his head, James talked to him and patted his sleek neck, and touched him gently with his heel. Then he rode him, and quickly than words can tell, Mr. Pirate was angrily clamping the cold bit. He reared. Warburton caught him by the nose and the neck. Pirate came down, trembling with rage.

"Here boy: catch him here," cried Warburton. William knew his business, and he grasped the bridle close under Pirate's jaws. "That's it. Now hold him."

"James, I regret that I urged you to ride him. You will be hurt," she said. Her worry was plainly visible on her face.

James smiled his pleasantest and touched his hat.

"Very well, then: I have warned you. If he bolts, hold him for a tree. That's the only way to stop him."

"I'll take him now, William," said James smiling.

James shortened the bridle-rein to the required length, took a firm grip on Pirate's mane, and vaulted into the saddle. Pirate stood perfectly still. He shook his head, James talked to him and patted his sleek neck, and touched him gently with his heel. Then he rode him, and quickly than words can tell, Mr. Pirate was angrily clamping the cold bit. He reared. Warburton caught him by the nose and the neck. Pirate came down, trembling with rage.

"This is Jane, my own horse, and there are few living things I love so well. Remember this. She is a thoroughbred, a first class horse; and I have done more than five feet on her back."

She moved on. Warburton following slowly and thoughtfully. There was a good deal to think of just now. The way he saw of this girl, the less he understood her purpose in hiring him. She couldn't possibly know anything about him, who or what he was. With his heart gone he failed her to recognize him in the man who traveled across the Atlantic with her. A high-bred woman, such as she was, would scarcely harbor any kind of feelings toward a man who had acted as he was acting. If any man had kissed her, he would have broken every bone in his body or killed one to do it. And she had paid his fine at the police-station and had hired him on probation! Truly he was in the woods and there wasn't a sign of blood trail. (It will be seen that my hero hadn't had much experience with women. She knew nothing of him whatever. She was simply curious and brave enough to attempt to have this curiously gratifying, of course, I did not venture to say that, had he been coarse in appearance, she would have had anything to do with him.)

"This is Dick, my father's horse," muddling toward a sorrel, large and well set-up. "He will be your mount. The animal in the next stall is Pirate."

Pirate was the handsomest black gelding Warburton had ever laid eyes on.

"What a beauty!" he exclaimed enthusiastically, forgetting that grooms should be utterly without enthusiasm. He reached out his hand to pat the black nose, when a warning cry restrained him. Pirate's ears lay flat.

"Take care! He is a bad-tempered animal. No one rides him and we keep him only to exhibit at the shows. Only half a dozen have ridden him with any success. He won't take a curb in his mouth and he always runs away. It takes a very strong man to hold him in. I really don't believe that he's vicious, only terribly mischievous, like a bullying boy."

"I should like to ride him."

The girl looked at her new groom in a manner which expressed frank astonishment. Was he in earnest, or was it merely a bravado? An idea came to her, a mischievous idea.

"It is very unusual," she said, searching him to the very heart with her deep blue eyes. "For all I know you may be the greatest rascal, or you may be the honestest man, in the world." His smile was so frank and engaging that she was forced to smile herself. But she thought of something and frowned. "Take down that saddle with the hooded stirrups," said Warburton, briefly. He would ride Pirate now, even if Pirate had been sired in Beelzebuth's stables. He carefully inspected the saddle, the stirrup-straps and the girth. "Very good, indeed. Hunches on saddles are always a hidden menace and a constant danger. Now, bring me what you have to say to me?" Deceitfully, Mr. Robert was violently in love.

Democratic Convention.

Democrats will derive several advantages from an early state platform convention.

It will afford an excellent opportunity for the representatives of the party to put their organization in the attitude before the elector, according to their aims, about which they have been doing so much division in two campaigns.

It will enable the party to choose its position without regard to the position of either faction in the opposing party. The Democrats in this campaign will not have to be content with what the Republicans have left after making their platform.

It will enable the Democratic party to choose its material, leaving to it, entirely, the task of framing a platform from what is left for them or else appearing to endorse something already appropriated by a party earlier in the field. This is a great advantage to the party, no matter whether by design or not.

The platform should be on well-recognized democratic lines. If there has been any departure from a Jeffersonian democracy, there should be a return to it. It should be kept in mind that this year's contest will be somewhat in the nature of a referendum for the greater control of the state.

The Democratic may win in this contest, but whether they do or not, the lessons of experience should be heeded and they must return to democratic principles and stay there and get a repudiation for a reliability and soundness.

There is absolutely no other sensible course to pursue. Dartington does not.

Cost of Living Grows.

How the cost of living in the United States is mounting rapidly under the Democratic, although the same commodities are sold much more cheaply for export, is shown in a bulletin just issued by the Bureau of Labor, entitled "Course of Wholesale Prices for 1905."

The report says that wholesale prices, including all commodities, reached a higher point in 1905 than at any other time during the sixteen years covered by the investigation. The average of commodities for the year 1905 was 1.3 per cent above the average for the ten year period 1890 to 1900, 2.2 per cent above the low price in 1890, and 2.5 per cent above the average for 1904.

The year's average, compared with the year of lowest average prices during the sixteen years from 1890 to 1905, in each of general groups of commodities shows far more products 2.5 per cent higher than in 1890; food, 2.6 per cent higher than in 1890; clothing, 2.5 per cent higher than in 1890; fuel and lighting, 2.9 per cent higher than in 1890; metals and implements, 3.2 per cent higher than in 1890; lumber and building materials, 3.4 per cent higher than in 1890; drugs and chemicals, 2.1 per cent higher than in 1890; house furnishing goods, 2.5 per cent higher than in 1890, and the articles covered in the groups, 2.5 per cent higher than in 1890. Prices reached the highest point in December, 1905, when they were 1.9 per cent above the average for the ten year period, 1890 to 1899, and 3.7 per cent above the low prices in 1890. Prices in December, 1905, were 5.6 per cent above the prices in December, 1900.

A Startling Admission.

Waupaca Herald.—"The following editorial comment on W. J. Bryan from Friday morning's Milwaukee Sentinel, Wisconsin's leading stewart republican paper, is, indeed, startling in view of the venomous manner in which that paper always treated Mr. Bryan in the past. It says:

"The gale of party fever that will once more fill the sails of Mr. Bryan's twice stranded bark is already unmistakably rising. His welcome home by elements of the party formally in hot disagreement over his candidacy will amount to an irresistible endorsement of his candidacy in 1908. Democratic conventions in several states have gratuitously and pointedly declared for him."

"But he is a most attractive personality, a vastly popular man, a good American in point of earnest patriotism, and the republican national convention will have to play a trump card with the American people to insure his defeat."

In accordance with established custom, sanctioned by national legislation, and the wish of all true Americans hearts that love the Flag, I recommend the observance, throughout Wisconsin, of THURSDAY, JUNE 11, AS FLAG DAY.

On that day let the multitude of freedom be suitably displayed from our houses, in our business places, and upon all public buildings. Let us pause for a moment in the busy hours of the day and reflect upon the history of our flag and the principles and national unity which it symbolizes. Let us tell the story of its birth and its glorious victories to our children, and let us strive to impress upon them that the most beautiful trait in the American character is the love of country as typified in our love for the flag. Let us tell them that its red signifies the courage of the American heart, its White the purity of our motives, and its Blue our invincible fidelity to the cause of truth and right. No patriotic citizen of our country can look upon the banner of Liberty and Justice without a quickening of the pulse, and a renewing of the resolution that, in peace or in war, the flag shall be first in his heart, fixed in his home, and first in his hopes.

In Testimony Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Wisconsin to be affixed.

Chief Hale's Fire Fighters.

Will positively exhibit Grand Rapids on Saturday, June 23. It is the purpose of this splendid and spectacular exhibition to represent the life of an American fireman just as he lives it, that the public may gain some faint idea of what they owe to this army of worthy heroes. It is the most thrilling exhibition of the art of battling with fire that has ever been given, and is presented by Chief Hale and his splendid company of trained firemen. Nor are the men the only actors in the drama. Chief Hale has an auxiliary company of trained horses whose intelligence seems human.

There is also connected with this exhibition a mammoth hippodrome, daring aerial acts, lady riders and acrobatic performances of the highest order. It requires weeks to transport this enormous production, and carries two magnificent bands of 35 first class musicians, and will make a grand parade when exhibiting in Grand Rapids, Saturday, June 23.

Farmers should talk this matter up with their neighbors and if the sentiment seems favorable for an Institute for their town they should write us at once for application blank.

Both Were Found Guilty.

Steven Green and Tom Knutson engaged in a fight on the street on Saturday afternoon and they were both gathered in by the police. Knutson was taken before Justice Keyes on Saturday and pleaded not guilty to the charge, but the court found him guilty and imposed a fine. In default of payment, he was given thirty days in the county jail.

Green had his trial on Tuesday and was also found guilty and was fined $5 and costs. Green states that he will appeal his case to the circuit court, as he claims that Knutson was the aggressor in the scrap.

PECK'S BAD BOY WITH THE CIRCUS

By HON. GEORGE W. PECK

A Story of "Peck's Bad Boy Around."

Illustration by J. R. Green.

Pa and the Bad Boy Among the Traitors—Pa Tried to Persuade the Head Bandit to Become a Financier—The Bandit Plunders Train Robbery and Puts Up a Good Argument.

I used to think I would like to be a train robber, and have the same gang of hogs to do my bidding. I have often planned and planned putting a red light on the track and stopping a train laden with gold, holding a revolver to the head of the engineer, and compelling him to go and dump the express car. Then we would fill our pockets and bawseuses with rolls of bills that would choke a hippopotamus, and ride away to our shack in the mountains, divide up the swag, go on a trip to New York, bathe in champagne, dress like millionaires, go to theater in the morning, noon and night.

Pa told them about the wave of reform. They told him that our stampede would never stop until our stampede would form an anti-slavery nation, and he said the people would think we were young Vandals. Since pa and I were captured by the Hole-in-the-Wall gang in the train robbing and capturing for ransom business, and that robbers never happy except when a robbery is safely over, and the gang gets good and decent.

The first day or two after pa and I and the traitorous cowboys were captured, we had a pretty nice time, eating canned stuff and elk meat, and pa was sent home telling the gang of what had happened in the outside world for several months, as the gang did not read the daily papers. When they robbed a train they let the newsboy alone for a train he would get the drop on them.

Pa told them about the wave of reform that was going over the country, and how the politicians were taking the railroads and monopolies by the neck, and shaking them like a terrier would shake a rat; how the insurance companies that had been for years tying the policyholders hand and foot, and searching their pockets for illicit gains, had been caught in the act, and how the presidents and directors were liable to have to serve time in the penitentiary. Pa told the Hole-in-the-Wall gang all the news until he got home.

"And how is my old friend Teddy, the train robber?" asked one of the gang.

"He's in jail, and he's got the drop on him."

"The president is in due shape," said pa, "and he's making friends every day, fighting the trusts and trying to save the people from ruin."

"Gee, but what a train robber Teddy would have made, if he had turned his talents in that direction, instead of wasting his strenuousness in politics," said the leader of the gang.

"I would give a thousand dollars to see him draw a bead on the ear of a fast mail, and make him get down and do the dynamite act, and then load up the saddle bags and pull out for the Hole-in-the-Wall. That man has wasted his opportunities, and instead of being at the head of a gang of robbers, with all the world at his feet, ready to hold up their hands at the slightest hint, living a life of freedom in the mountains, there he is doing political stunts, and wearing booted clothes, and eating with a fork."

"Well, he will make himself just as famous," said pa, "if he succeeds in landing the hold-up men of Wall street, and compelling them to disgorge their steals."

"But say," said pa, looking the leader of the bandit gang square in the eyes, "why don't you give up this bad habit of robbing people with guns, and go back east and enter some respectable business and make your mark? You are a born financier, I can see by the way you divide up the lucre when you rob a train. You would shine in the business world. Come on, go back east to spend your money after you get it, sleeping nights on the rocks and eating canned stuff you pack in here after robbing a grocery, than to enter the realms of high finance and be respected by the people, and be one of the people, with no price on your head, one of the great body of eighty million men who rule a country that is the pride of the earth?" You must be crazy," said the leader.

"Sure, Mike," said the cubber. "Everybody here respects me, and who respects the Wall street high finance and life insurance robber? Not even their valets. Me one of the people! Ye gods, but you watch these same people for a few years. You say they run the government? They and their governors are run by Wall street, which owns the United States senate, body and soul. The people are pawns on a chess board, moved by the players, and they only talk, while the Wall street owners act. Let me tell you a story. Once had a dog trained so that he would lay down and roll over for a cracker, and would have a piece of meat on his nose until his mouth would water and his eyes sparkle, but he would wait for me to snap my fingers before he would toss the meat in the air with his nose and snatch it in his mouth, and swallow it whole for fear I would get it away from him. He would stand on his hind legs and speak and beg for a bone to be thrown to him so he could eat it. Do you know, the people of this country resent themselves and take monopoly, high finance, insurance, robbery, grafting and millionaire and billionnaire ownership of everything that pays by the throat and strangle them all, and do business themselves instead of having business done for them by the money power, they will never get noticed except when they do their tricks like my old dog. When the time comes that the people's wear dollars and are led by chains, and they have to stand on their hind legs and speak to their rich and arrogant masters for bones and hold meat on their noses until Wall street snaps their fingers, you will want to come on here in the mountains and live the free life of a train robber with a conscience. What do you think about it, but?" said the cubber to me.

"Well," says I to him, "you talk like a socialist, or a Democrat, but I talk all right. If I am one of the people I will do as the rest do, but I'll be burned if I will get down and roll over for anybody."

A COSTLY REVENGE

DUKE OF SUTHERLAND UNLOADS RICH ESTATE.

Compels County Council of Staffordshire, Eng., to Cleanse River Trent, Which They Had Refused to Do for Him.

It takes a wealthy man to get sweet revenge and at the same time heap coals of fire upon the heads of those who have disappointed him, if they have not absolutely abused him. The Duke of Sutherland has turned the tide upon the county council of Staffordshire by donating his princely estate on the River Trent to the county for use as an institution for higher education.

Some months ago, it may be remembered, the duke publicly announced that owing to the polluted condition of the River Trent, which flows past Trentham Hall, his magnificent Staffordshire seat, physicians had pronounced it an unsafe and insanitary place for him to live.

AMONG CRANBERRY MEN.

EDITED BY W. H. FITCH.

[All commendations and special exchanges relating to this department should be sent to Cranberry, Wood County, Wis.]

An Apology.

By omission of a caption of "Pointers from the Packer" credit was given when due, in late issue to several items of interest and value.

Special mention is made of this oversight for the reason that the Packer has always been a good friend to the Wisconsin Cranberry industry having on two respective occasions sent representatives to the meetings of the State Association in the persons of Mr. Bartholomew and Prof. Carlisle, and whose accounts were of a most generous and useful character.

"It Has To Be Worked Out."

A townsmen who has moved to the city and gone to farming was in the office the other day and stated that he had read everything in "Wood Farmer" with a great deal of interest. He then remarked, "I am in trouble with it that has to be worked out." We replied, "That is incomparably a good idea."

There are thousands of men in the cities who would like to go onto farms and spend their old age in the country, provided only they could get a full paper or book that would tell them all of agricultural knowledge that did not need to be worked out, in itself. What a good work out of itself, fortunately or unfortunately, this can not be done. The teachings of a first-class agricultural paper are like the teachings of the Good Book, of no practical use until they are worked out. Our problems are just the same as the preacher's. Any number of men would like to go onto farms and insure their old age. If it did not have to be worked out, it religion could be poured into them like water into a bucket. The same is true of all other professions. You cannot make a doctor by filling a man up with medical science, or a lawyer by stuffing him with law, stone, nor a great writer by filling him with Shakespeare, or other great master of style. That is, that is of any use, it would have to be worked out.

Whether fortunately or unfortunately, a paper cannot tell the farmer in minute detail just how to work out. He cannot tell him what to do under his conditions, because the circumstances under which he works have to be applied in his particular case and no one can say but the farmer himself. Hence the editor of an agricultural paper can mainly teach principles, expounding the laws governing the growth of the plant and the growth of the animal, and underlying principles of soil culture.

If the turned wheat from the city or the manure barn, gets lost, or the first principles, puts him to work and works them out, he will get the benefit. If he does not do so, he is just like the man who goes to church regularly every Sabbath, pays his pew rent, joins in the singing and the greetings of the people, but does not try to live it in practice. That man probably thinks he is serving the Lord, possibly puts himself on the back with the idea that he is a pretty good Christian, a very good one indeed; whereas as a matter of fact he is not serving the Lord at all, but just simply pleasing himself, and we might also add, deceiving himself.

So far with the man who reads agricultural papers. He must not expect the editor to tell him just what to do or what not to do. He makes a mistake if he does that; but the editor can expand the law, which operate in the soil, in the plant, in the animal, and in the human body, before it reaches the seed, entering that way into the nearest seed, entering that way into the nearest berry, but leaving the opening unsealed.

The word at this stage is still very minute and difficult to see with the naked eye. In the first observation of them were missed, not knowing that they entered the seed. After eating the pulp from the first seed and growing to a size more easily discernible, it comes out and attacks the other seeds of the seed cavity. If it does not enter the seed cavity, before it does work free, it begins to eat the pulp of the berry.

At this stage it is usually about 1/2 grown. It now eats its way out through the wall of the berry, crawls to another and eats its way in, at any point this time. Over and over again, nearly every surface of the berry, it spits a very fine delicate membrane, imperious to water. It leaves the interior of this second berry as it did the first and reappears nearly full size. After this it goes to other berries seldom sealing the opening after the second berry, the rapidity of its work after the second berry, the number of other berries, if the berries are in a cluster. Seven berries in one cluster have been observed all destroyed by one worm. When the berries hang in clusters the worm often enters berry eats a few of its seeds, and passes out again, sometimes back into the berry from which it came.

A man who is in perfect health, so he can do an honest day's work when necessary, has much for which he should be thankful. Mr. L. C. Rodgers of Brandon, Pa., writes that he was not only unable to work, but he couldn't stoop over to tie his own shoes. Two bottles of Foleys' Kidney Cure made a new man of him. He says, "Success to Foleys' Kidney Cure." Daily Drug & Jewelry Co.

The first-class agricultural paper is not intended for the amusement of the farmer, or while away an idle hour or to furnish simply reading material to assist him in the principles underlying the science and art of agriculture, and fill the reader with his own enthusiasm, so that he may put them in practice and put money in his pocket. To say that it teaches the farmer to do more, and no other paper in agricultural paper, on the contrary, it is about as high compliment as can be given it. Wallaces' Farmer.

We esteem it a privilege and find it a great pleasure to endorse every word of above and feel sure that the veteran cranberry man will also say Amen.

THEN HE FELT STREAKED.

Hubby Was Too Obliging When There Wasn't Any Occasion for It.

A matron and his wife were sitting in one of the front rows in a theater when the man saw a large hawk with an amber head. The chaste Daily News tells what he did with it.

Looking about him, he saw that two women and their escorts had just come in. A smile of the hawk indicated that he had made a mistake.

Then he took two ladies across the aisle. They seemed to be interested. The hawk was a curiosity, and an amber of a unique coloring. They hesitated, but hurried the pair back.

Desperately, he began the search anew. Two ladies unattended seemed likely owners. To them also he showed the pair. They took it and enjoyed its pattern.

As soon as the man felt a tug on his sleeve, it was his wife, and she remarked: "Why are you showing my husband to strangers?"

It had to be sent over to the ladies, who were still looking at the hawk.

Maybe the Wife Had Been Out, Maybe Not, the Effect Was the Same.

Capt. Mark Cato was being congratulated on his $1,000 from the Carnegie fund for bravery in the war of the Cheyenne, related the New York Tribune.

"The gift was unexpected," said Capt. Cato with a modest smile. "It was as unexpected, though, by no means as unpleasant, as the report that a wife had to her husband when he came home at three o'clock in the morning."

The man came home very quietly, for he took off his shoes on the front doorstep. Then he unlocked the door and went cautiously and slowly upstairs on his tiptoe, holding his breath.

"The light was streaming through the crevices of the shade of the bed room. With a sigh he paused. Then he opened the door and entered."

"The wife stood by the bureau fully dressed."

"I don't expect I could be sitting up for my wife to be there."

"I haven't been," she said. "I just came in to say hello."

"I was about to think of something else to say when the young woman suddenly spoke up."

"By the way, Mr. Lingerton," she said, "I tried to call you up by telephone this morning, but I didn't get through."

"You tried to call me up by telephone?"

"Yes. I wanted to ask you a question."

"Why, I haven't any telephone number."

"Oh, yes you have. Double six four seven."

The young man made a rapid mental calculation.

"Twenty-three!" he gasped, reaching for his telephone.

Every boy has three ambitions before he finally settles down. His first is to be the steady drummer in the village band. The second is to be an Indian killer and scout. The third is to be a locomotive engineer. Then he forgets about them and is ambitious only to make a living.

An old soldier, released from confinement at 72, recovered his health and died as follows:

"I stuck to coffee for years, although it knifed me again and again."

"About eight years ago as a result of coffee drinking which congested my liver, I was taken with a very severe attack of malarial fever."

"I would apparently recover and start about my usual work only to suffer a relapse. After this had been repeated several times during the year I was again taken violently ill."

"The Doctor said he had carefully studied my case, and it was either quit coffee or die, advising me to take Postum in its place. I had always thought coffee was the best drink for me, especially when sick, and I was very much taken back by the Doctor's decision, for I hadn't suspected the coffee I took could possibly cause my trouble."

I thought it over for a few minutes, and finally told the Doctor I would make the change. Postum was procured for me the same day and made according to directions; well, I liked it and stuck to it, and since then I have been a new man. The change in health began in a few days and surprised me, and now, although I am seventy-two years of age, I do lots of hard work, and for the past month have been teaming, driving sixteen miles a day besides loading and unloading the wagon. That's what Postum in the place of coffee has done for me. I now like the Postum as well as I did coffee."

"I have known people who did not care for Postum at first, but after having learned to make it properly according to directions they have come to like it as well as coffee. I never miss a chance to praise it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Squire Lord, of local fame in Ellingham, N. H., 50 years ago, had accumulated, by all sorts of methods, a fortune for the times and place. Keeping the family store, being practically the "bank" of those parts, and increasing wealth beyond expenditures had nourished an ambition to live in a place larger and with more social opportunities than the little village afforded. So he packed up one autumn, took a house in Portland, which was the town o' the world to country people, than with his family started in to cut a dash.

To his chagrin, he found he was one of many in that place, and not a shop or bazaar was coming his way.

Christmas saw him back bag and baggage in Ellingham, and that evening in his store, to the inquiry of one of the village leaders, "Why'd ye come back, squire, fore you'd calculated?" he replied:

"I've had enough of that place. Yet they are all thoroughbreds."

"Like their masters," said Warburton's mental supplement.

"Father hasn't ridden for years, however. The groom I discharged this morning was capable enough on the box, but it was then as useless to me in my mounting rides. I ride from about till eleven, even Sundays sometimes. Remain here till I return."

As she disappeared Warburton drew in an exceedingly long breath and released it slowly. "Heavens, what an order!" He drew the back of his hand across his forehead and found it moist. Not a word about the fine; he must brach it and thank her. Ah, to ride with her every morning, to adjust her stirrup, to obey every command, to which she might give voice, to feel her small horse repulse his palm as she mounted; Heaven could hold nothing greater than this. And how easily a woman may be imposed upon! Delicately, Mr. Robert was violently upon her.

When she returned there was a sunbonnet on her head, and she had pinned the poppies on her breast. (Why?)

"What was your object in climbing on the box of my carriage and running away with it?"

"Queer as a flash of light he concluded his answer, "Madam, it was a jest between me and some maids!" He had almost said serving maids, but the thought of Nance checked his blurt.

"Between you and some maids?"

Madam, he is a blushing man; and if he is blushing with good looks, a little more than a man. You will understand that in this instance I am trying to win them through a woman's eyes. (With a nod she bade him in the carriage I thought it would be an admirable chance to play them a trick."

"Pray, since when have serving maids been allowed exit from the main hall of the British embassy?"

Mr. Robert was positive that the shadow of a sarcastic smile rested for a moment on her lips. But it was instantly hidden under the poppies.

"That is something of which I have no intimate knowledge. A group is not supposed to turn his head on the box unless spoken to. You will readily understand that in this instance I am a trooper."

"Yes, Madam. It was as a trooper."

"What regt?"

"I prefer to say, 'Regt'."

"Madam, you are so fondly attached to him that I thought it would be an admirable chance to play them a trick."

"What is the matter?" I said.

"Have you foul'd out that your staff is stuffed with sav'urs, or has your dearest friend picked up her playthings and gone home? You appear to have some provoking 'Cap' pointment. Did you not get on the promotion list after all your work? Come, dear, pour out your trouble. Tell me what has happened. Perhaps I can help you. I've been in hard places myself."

Louise managed to smile a little as she answered: "The trouble isn't one that you can cure. It is just that I am such an idiot of a girl, always making mistakes and setting people against me. I have done it three times to date; I have three times said the wrong thing. Come, dear, pour out your trouble. Tell me what has happened. Perhaps I can help you. I've been in hard places myself."

He wheeled. His astonishment could not be disguised quickly enough to escape her vigilant eyes. Once more he had recourse to the truth.

"Yes, Madam. It was as a trooper that I learned horsemanish."

PA and the Bad Boy Among the Train Robbers—Pa Tried to Persuade the Head Bandit to Become a Financier—The Bandit Prefers Train Robbery and Puts Up a Good Argument.

I used to think I would like to be a train robber, and have a nice gang of boys to do my bidding. I have often pictured my gang putting a red light on the track and stopping a train laden with gold, holding a revolver to the head of the engineer, and compelling him to stop, while the Wall street owners act. Let me tell you a story. I once had a dog trained so that he would lay down and roll over for a cracker, and would hold a piece of meat on his nose until his mouth would water and his eyes sparkle, but he would wait for me to snap my fingers before he would toss the meat in the air with his nose and snatched it in his mouth, and swallow it whole for fear I would get it away from him. He would stand on his hind legs and speak and beg for a bone to chomp to him so he could catch it. Do you know, the people of this country rental me one dog, if they do not have a dog, and pay me monotonously high finance, insurance policy, grafting and millions and billions ownership of everything that pays by the throat and strangle them all, and do business themselves instead of having business done for them by the power of money, they will never get noticed except when they do their tricks like my old dog. When the time comes that the people's ear dollars are led by chains, and they have to stand on their hind legs and speak to their rich and arrogant masters for bones, and hold meat on their noses until Wall street snaps its fingers, you will want to come out here in the mountains and live the free life of a train robber with a conscience. What do you think about it, but?" said the robber to me.

"Well," said I to him, "you talk like a socialist, or a Democrat, but you talk all right. If I am one of the people I will do as the rest do, but I'll be darned if I will get down and roll over for a dog's bone." And so the bandit goes on. In the mountains, though the number is limited to a small percentage of the whole population of the club.

State Tuberculosis Hospital. Plans for a $75,000 tuberculosis hospital to be established by the state board of health near Waukesha, in Waukesha county, are being prepared by Architect Howland Russell of Milwaukee, and it is expected that they will be completed within a few days. The general design of the buildings already has been approved by the advisory board, so that little delay will ensue in the construction work. It is desired to have the institution ready for occupancy by fall. According to the law authorizing the establishment of state tuberculosis sanatoriums, all patients must pay a fee of five dollars a week for treatment, but indigent persons who cannot pay may be admitted to the hospital by one of the officers of their county, in which event the county is compelled to pay the fee. The hospital will consist of four suites, an infirmary, a dining, cooking, and general dining room, a kitchen, a laundry, a washroom, a laundry, a washroom for the superintendents and a stable. Cement and hollow tile will be used in the construction of the different buildings. Each shock will accommodate 20 patients. They will be 10 feet wide and 12 feet long. Below the block will be used in the construction.

Robbers Present Case. Before the Wisconsin railroad rate commission the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul company began the presentations of its reasons why the commission ought not to grant the petition of Secretary of State House and others for an order establishing two cents a mile as the maximum passenger rate in this state. The facts presented by the St. Paul company are similar in effect to those of the Northwestern. It is claimed that the average rate of passenger travel is only slightly above two cents a mile now and that to make a maximum rate of two cents a mile would necessitate the elimination of express, telegraph and mileage books, and even then would operate to the great loss of small profits now earned by the passenger traffic.

Plan Celebration of Fourth. The grand Fourth of July celebration begins with sunrise guns and ending with an elaborate display of fireworks in the evening, is planned at Madison. It is likely the celebration will be held in the capital park, the one big, central and spacious square in the city. Madison has done more to observe the Fourth with a celebration for about 14 years, and the enthusiasm men feel it is high time that the capital city was heard from.

State Federation of Labor. The State Federation of Labor, which is to be out for the convention of the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor, according to the call, each local union of 100 members or less, is entitled to one delegate, and one delegate for each additional 100 members or major fraction thereof; each central body is entitled to one delegate. The convention meets this year in Madison in the state capitol. The convention will be in session at least four days beginning June 18.

Willing to Comply with Law. The Mutual and Home Life Insurance companies have notified Insurance Commissioner Hest that they are willing to comply with the new state law prohibiting the writing of long deferred provisions. If the companies receive their contracts made in Wisconsin since the new law went into effect so as to comply fully with its provisions and agrees to carefully observe it in the future, the proposed reorganization of their trustees to operate in this state will be pressed.

To Facilitate Rural Delivery. By the terms of an order, a copy of which has been sent out by the post office department, the rural delivery stations will be re-arranged to direct a station on their way to the post office for collection. The carriers will then only those boxes for which they have mail for delivery and those packages, the which signatures are displayed. By this time the new arrangement is expected to be in full effect and rural delivery along rural delivery routes will be greatly facilitated.

Exempts Are Exempted. The civil service commission has heard requests of several appointing boards for the exemption of certain employees. It was decided to place on the non-competitive list the expert railroad rate accountants that the railroad commission may find it necessary in emergencies to employ.

Civil Service Examination. The state civil service commission has fixed June 16 as the date for holding the next competitive examination for the positions in the state service.

THE HATLESS WINTER GIRLS. After experiencing for several years a series of shocks and surprises occasioned by the sight of the hatless summer girls defying the glare of almost tropical sun at seashore and mountain resorts, we are now told that the weather is likely to be several days in advance of the winter's end, a deep, dark and austere winter, like that of an organ, it means that the weather will be showery, with possible gales. A sharp, high note foretells cold, stormy weather, with, in winter, snow and sleet—Electricity.
